The importance of living worthy to serve a mission was the theme of a fireside talk given by Elder Jeffrey R. Holland, a member of the Council of the Twelve, to a capacity crowd in the Wilkinson Center Ballroom Wednesday evening.

Elder Holland spoke personally and candidly to the audience of prospective missionaries from both BYU and UVSC. "I wish I could give this talk in a smaller setting," he said. "In a living room, or literally by a fireside where I could be a little more personable than in this setting.'

While emphasizing the importance of living worthy before being called to serve a mission, Elder Holland pounded the pulpit several times to drive home the point. "We cannot repent on the Friday clean on Saturday," he said. "If you don't understand that now, I promise you will when you get out in the mission field. Elder Holland said that a willingness to be endowed in the temple and then not following mission rules is fundamentally flawed.

an incidental experience on the way to the mission field," he said. "I'm excessive on this. Sometimes my wife gets frightened because I become so impassioned, but when it comes to missionary work, I must.

Elder Holland also said that when missionaries don't follow the rules the devil has already > done his work. "In the mission field we have the opportunity to attend zone conferences that can take us off this planet," he said. "But the devil's work is easy when the mission president has to spend all his time counseling missionaries about the importance of getting up in the morning, getting haircuts and not wearing an earring."

He drew raucous laughter from the audience by summing up his frustration with "it makes me want to go out and shoot myself."

Elder Holland said missionary work is the lifeblood of the church, and really the only calling the Apostles have as a group.

BYU President Merrill J. Bateman introduced Elder Holland at the fireside. The pair both served their fulltime missions in Great Britain where, according to Elder Holland, President

Utah's voter turnout well below normal

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Utahns went to the polls Tuesday in low - perhaps even record low — numbers for a presidential election.

The numbers still were fuzzy early Wednesday, with the exact number of registered voters not yet computed, but about 660,000 votes were cast in the presidential race.

That would be a bit under 51 percent of the 1.3 million adults the state calculates Utah has. That also probably would be somewhere in the neighborhood of the national turnout. In the last presidential election in 1992, about 65 percent of adult Utahns voted, based on one set of Census figures, making Utah No. 12 in the nation for turnout. By another calculation, using just the civilian, noninstitutional population, about 72.3 percent of the voting-age population cast ballots in 1992, making Utah No. 4.

Incomplete registration figures from the lieutenant governor's office put the registration total at about 1.076 million, which would make the turnout at about 61 percent of the registered voters. However that figure may be off quite a bit.

For example, the state's figure for the number of registered voters in Salt Lake County was 453,000. However, County Clerk Sherrie Swenson said that figure included inactive voters and others needing to be trimmed from the list, reducing the number to 434,168 for a turnout of 66 percent of the registered voters.

Salt Lake County's turnout in presidential elections since 1960 has averaged 80.8 percent, and its lowest totals during that period were in the mid-70 percentiles.

"We were so busy, I thought we'd have at least a 75 percent turnout and hoped for 80 percent," Swenson said. She believes the turnout may have been low because of the wide poll margins in major races befut whe election. "When you don't have races that are hotly contested and especially when you have snow on top of it ... I think perhaps the interest wasn't generated," she said.

Statewide, the turnout of registered voters in presidential elections since 1896 has averaged 78 percent, with about two-thirds of them falling between 72 and 84 percent. The lowest was 66.4 percent in 1912

It won't be known for sometime what effect Motor Voter registration had on the turnout. Since the law was passed last year, registration rolls nationwide have increased by 9 million. The law allows people to vote at motor-vehicle departments, through the mail and at public assistance, disability and military-recruiting offices.

In Utah this year, 43,050 of the 95,467 voter registration cards from all sources — except from satellite registration in the final week - were a result of the new law.

There were varying reasons for the staff reshuffling. Some, like presidential senior adviser George Stephanopoulos, made no secret of the fact they are worn out. The congressman, who said he had endured fever and chills most of the night, planned to file a formal request with the lieutenant governor's office for an investigation by late Wednesday or today.

'Thirty-thousand ballots counted incorrectly could make the difference in this race," Orton said.

Mike Mower, Cannon's campaign chairman, said he was confident any probe or recount would not change

When those votes started pouring in during the wee hours Wednesday morning, Cannon far outpaced Orton in the district's hub.

"We love Utah County. Always have and always will," a groggy Cannon said shortly before sun-up. "It's a terrifically warm feeling."

It was perhaps fitting that the Orton-Cannon contest dragged on, considering the grinding pace of the campaign since Cannon won the GOP primary in June. Orton, who had befuddled Republicans for six years by winning on their turf, turned defensive as Cannon mounted a well-financed campaign based on his allegiance to mainstream Republican principles.

It didn't help the Democrat that his own party and president were cool toward him, even though the 48-yearold tax lawyer has culled his image as

Italian child with disorder can't feel pain

ROME — A group of Italian children who can't feel pain or cry has attracted the attention of New York-based experts seeking new insights into the human

The study, which began this week at Rome's Bambino Gesu children's hospital, was inspired by a 9-year-old Italian girl whose parents, frustrated by a lack of a diagnosis by Italian doctors, put out a plea on the Internet.

The child, Alice Lazzaroni, feels no pain. She sometimes bends her joints out of shape while pretending to be a ballerina. Once she broke a leg bone and ran around for months before her parents realized she was injured.

Alice also can't sweat, making even the slightest rise in body temperature dangerous. Her parents must rent a house in the mountains each summer because it is cooler and she is less likely to become too warm.

The family was referred to Dr. Felicia Axelrod, a New York University Medical Center expert in functions of the nervous system that are involuntary, like sweating, flinching from pain and swallowing.

Axelrod diagnosed Alice as suffering from a rare genetic disorder known as type 4 of hereditary sensory and autonomic neuropathies, or HSAN.

When the Lazzaronis, who come from a town near Venice, said they knew of other children with symptoms like Alice's, Axelrod decided to bring a team of Unopposed on the ballot, Bentley was surprised and disappointed at first, but then got to thinking.

'You know," she mused, "people don't like you to boss them around for too long, and I've been bossing people around in this town for a long time." Told of her comment, Adams said, "You got it from the horse's mouth."

Clinton wins with or without Perot on ballot

It looks like President Clinton would have beaten Bob Dole by about the same margin if Ross Perot hadn't been on the ballot.

Perot voters would have divided their votes evenly between Clinton and Dole if the Texas billionaire hadn't been in the race, according to interviews Tuesday with voters at polling places nationwide.

The Election Day results, with 99 percent of precincts reporting, were: Clinton, 49 percent; Dole, 41 percent; Perot, 8 percent. Other third-party candidates got a combined 2 percent.

Asked who they would have voted for if only Clinton and Dole had been on the ballot, 30 percent of Perot's voters said they would have backed Clinton, 30 percent said they would have backed Dole and 36 percent said they wouldn't

Computer ills delay Utah County vote tally

The irony was not lost on Utah County Commissioner David Gardner: In a part of the state renowned as a mini-Silicon Valley, computer glitches brought delivery of election results to a crawl.

Not even the presence of experts from the Novell, Corel, Folio and Micron computer firms seemed to matter much Tuesday night when the county's computer system broke down.

Gardner, eight computer operators and a security guard spent all night trying to get the results out. The counting wasn't finished until 6:30 a.m.

Among candidates waiting for the outcome of close races was Rep. Bill Orton, D-Utah. Republican challenger Chris Cannon eventually claimed victory in the 3rd Congressional District race, but Orton called for an investigation into ballot irregularities in both Salt Lake and Utah counties.

'We had to go through and completely erase everything," Gardner said. "It became so confusing, we had no confidence in the accuracy of the numbers."

About 1:30 a.m. Wednesday, county officials decided the computer problems were too complicated to be fixed. All the computers were shut down and restarted, meaning the votes had to be counted all over again.

But county-by-county figures showed Orton managed to pull in surprising support in several of the 17 rural counties that make up the farreaching 3rd District. Orton won in Grand and San Juan counties, where voters felt deep animosity toward President Bill Clinton over his decision to set aside 1.7 million acres of federal land in southern Utah as the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Orton was harshly critical of Clinton's decision and bucked Cannon's claim that he was a Clinton clone hiding beneath a thin veneer of conservatism. Orton shunned the president and wouldn't even say whether he'd vote for him.

For the most part, Orton played the big-money card, accusing the multimillionaire Cannon of trying to buy the seat. Cannon poured more than $1.5 million into his campaign, most of it out of his own pocket. Orton spent roughly $600,000, much raised from political action committees.

"I feel like I've just played a oneman football game against the San Francisco 49ers," Orton said, who grew testier by the minute talking about the race.

"The only reason this race is even close is because they've spent millions of dollars," Orton said. "You spend that kind of money, you can make a candidate out of someone who can't put three words together.'

"Ballot measures are all about individuality," says Elaine Stuart, editor of State Government, a magazine published by the Council of State Governments, a nonprofit group in Lexington, Ky. "They are about shaping our identity as individual states."

California's Proposition 209, which bans racial and sex preferences in public hiring, contracting and education, was widely considered the most divisive — and one of the significant ballot battles around the country.

The final say will likely shape affirmative action programs nationally and will probably be decided, not by voters, but in the courts. Both sides Wednesday filed lawsuits over the measure - proponents to get it into effect, opponents to get rid of it as unconstitutional.

California also boasted some of the costliest campaigns, spending more than $40 million over a proposal to make it easier to sue for securities fraud. The nation's stock exchanges invested heavily - and successfully — in a campaign to kill it.

Voters optimistic, realistic about nation

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — After two elections of upheaval, America decided to stay the course, uncertain as it may be. It was with a mix of contentment, caution — and conservatism — that voters gave President Clinton four years but sent along a Republican Congress as chaperone.

After years of pessimism, it was an optimistic America that voted Tuesday: 55 percent said the economy was in good shape; 53 percent said the country was on the right track. "It is very hard to beat incumbents when everybody is not that mad," said Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott.

The electorate's caution was reflected in its skepticism about grand promises — such as GOP presidential nominee Bob Dole's to cut taxes 15 percent while balancing the budget. In exit polls, 66 percent said they didn't believe Dole could deliver.

The feeling was bipartisan: 65 percent said Clinton couldn't balance the budget and keep all his promises,

"Having watched first Democrats and then Republicans overreach after 1992 and 1994, I think voters are much more realistic about the possibility of change — and a lot more cautious about the magnitude of change that they want," said Democratic pollster Mark Mellman. Clinton and the GOP congressional leaders said they understood the mes-"It is the American system that, after the election, you figure out how to get things done," said House Speaker Newt Gingrich. Clinton said both he and the GOP benefitted from the final six weeks of Congress, when Republicans sent him welfare, health care and immigration reform legislation and a measure raising the minimum wage. It was a telling comment and a reminder of Clinton's more conservative approach after his repudiation in the 1994 Republican midterm rout. The health care measure Clinton signed this year was a far cry from the massive government plan he had pushed in 1994.

Boy Scouts and students oohed and aahed as balloons exploded in flames and chemicals magically changed colors at Chemical Magic.

BYU's Department of Chemistry and Biochemistry held a chemical magic show Wednesday night for students of all ages. Luther D. Giddings, chair of the Department of Chemistry and Biochemistry, said he hopes the show, in accordance with National Chemistry Week, helps the public appreciate the role of chem-

"The response has been overwhelming," said a secretary in the Chemistry Department. An extra show was added to accommodate the large number of people wanting to attend and was quickly filled.

The magic show opened with Giddings welcoming the audience and referring to the ancient custom of sacrifice. Instead of sacrificing animals, as in olden times, he would start the presentation with the sacrifice of a gummy bear. The bear was dropped into a boiling solution that exploded into bright, purple sparks flying around the counter.

The audience consisted of Boy Scout troops, high school students and others interested in science. "We get a real mix," Giddings said. "It's pretty well attended.

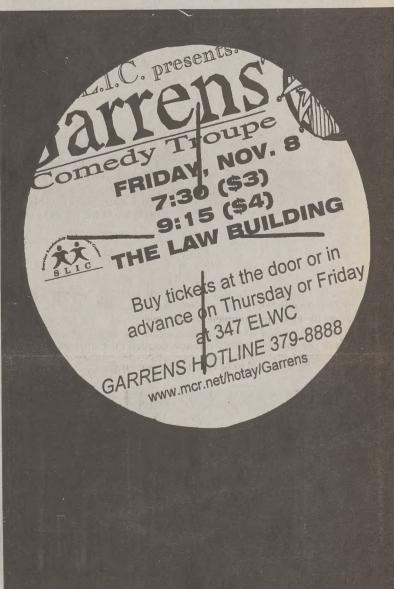

Chris Hrynyshyn, an elementary student from Orem, said he liked the exploding balloons and the loud noises. Chris' little brother, David, agreed. Their mother said she liked the presentation because it was very visual.

Alchemy was one of the demonstrations shown to the audience. Giddings said chemists had a way to make ends meet as he turned copper pennies silver, and then gold.

A series of clock reactions allowed viewers to see clear, colorless liquids change to orange, green, pink and blue. One of the experiments, called an oscillating reaction, changed a clear liquid orange to blue and then continued to change between the two colors for ten minutes.

Children's cries of, "Again! Again!" filled the air with the exploding balloons of the grand finale.

The will of the people

The election of 1996 is now history. Bill Clinton becomes the first Democratic president elected for two terms since FDR. In days to come, he will no doubt proclaim this election to be a mandate — the American public approving his moves in the last four years. But winner or not, it's no mandate.

By re-electing a Republican majority in the House and Senate, the American electorate has once again embraced change, chaos, and gridlock. Despite all the pundits, the lobbyists, and the left-leaning newspaper writers of the country, the voters have not bought into the Arkansas deal, lock, stock and barrel. They've reelected Bill Clinton, to be sure, but it's as much a distrust of the older-style Washington-insider politics embraced by Bob Dole, as it is a mandate for President

Face it. Nobody really knows where President Clinton stands on the issues. He's here and there; he's back and forth; he's to and fro. Nobody has really figured out where he stands, because he stands everywhere — and anywhere. He's the proverbial chameleon — the will of the wisp, embracing opinion polls and market research just as if he were — dare we say it? — Ronald Reagan.

This year, he's for welfare reform — because the country is for it. Next year, without the pressure of an election, who knows what he'll be for. Will he now embrace his liberal roots, or will he stay the "new" Bill that we've come to see as

With "gridlock" returning, as the House and Senate stay under Republican control, will he wheel and deal, to get something passed, or will he govern by veto and

And what about the Supreme Court? With Clinton in four more years, it gives him a chance to dramatically alter the course of the current court by appointing just one more justice from the liberal side.

The election does prove a few things, though. First off, it proves that the American public isn't as stupid as the pundits and politicians and media would assume. By voting to counter the power of the presidency with the power of the legislature, it once again proves that the public doesn't trust politicians. Second, it proves that the political and media analysts aren't as infallible as they thought there was no wholesale repudiation of the freshmen representatives. Third, it indicates that the public doesn't embrace either point of view wholeheartedly. There needs to be moderation in political life — just as moderation is needed in all things

Obviously, it's too soon to say if the 1996 election will go down as history-making, or as just another electoral fizzle. Historians will tell us if the choice the country made this year was smart or shortsighted. But one thing remains sure — this was no Clinton mandate.

Time to address campaign reform

By Chris Turner — Special to the Universe

Now that the election is over, the two major political parties are obligated to address an issue they have put off for too long: campaign finance reform. The way political campaigns are financed in this country is, at times, nauseating.

The 1996 campaign produced revelations of non-U.S. citizens contributing hundreds of thousands of dollars to both political parties and their candidates. The Indonesian interests who gave generously to the Democratic National Committee have garnered most of the media attention, although it is clear the GOP has also benefited from foreign money. For example, Newt Gingrich and Jesse Helms have each received six-figure sums from foreigners.

What we do not need is highly partisan investigations into this matter. It makes no difference which party controls Congress. Leaders in both parties should make concerted efforts to improve the system instead of trading accusations about the past.

Whether a bipartisan commission or a Congressional committee takes the lead, there will be no easy answers. Several current proposals will surely be considered. A few are worth mentioning.

* Public financing of congressional campaigns: This proposal is modeled on the current system. Clinton and Dole were awarded close to $70 million apiece for this year's general election campaign. They, and a few other Republicans, were also awarded about $37 million for the primary season. This system's genesis can be traced to the post-Watergate days when Congress sought to make the national election less corrupt. While its efforts were somewhat successful, most Americans still do not authorize $3 of their taxes to go to the presidential campaigns. Many voters despise these campaigns. Thus, it is unrealistic to expect taxpayers to foot even more of the bill.

* Outlawing Political Action Committees: Victor Morales made this a mantra of his quixotic Senate campaign against Phil Gramm, but the idea is unsound. The common reasoning is PACs are antithetical to democracy because the few rich people who contribute to them are somehow subverting the will of common Americans. Yet PACs are not only for the rich and famous; ordinary people can effect the process through a PAC. Teachers, workers, environmentalists, pro-lifers, pro-choicers and others participate in PACs. They are an important part of a political system which relies heavily upon coalition activism. Reformers might consider lowering the current PAC contribution limit, but should not try to eliminate them

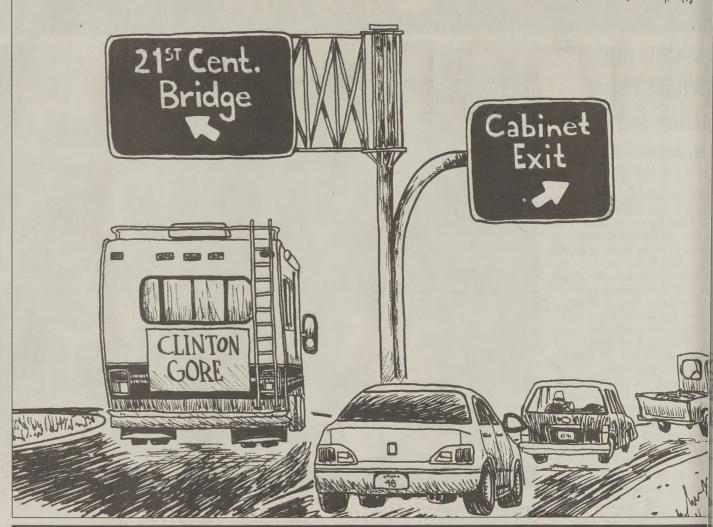

* Outlaw noncitizens' contributions: This is a no-brainer. Clinton already endorsed this, and the GOP should have no problem with it given their recent rhetoric.

* The "Soft Money" loophole: Soft money refers to the unlimited contributions national political parties take in, allegedly to be spent on voter education and registration. Technically, this money cannot be spent on specific candidates, but the parties have circumvented this rule. Tighter regulation is

* Individual contributions: The limit BYU blue is best color should be doubled to $2,000 to compensate for lost PAC revenue.

There are many issues deserving of attention, but campaign finance is among the biggest. If this subject is addressed by both parties in a meaningful way, real reform is possible. But if the parties stonewall and offer Band-Aid solutions, Americans will continue to lose faith in their government and its leaders.

U.N. plea for Zaire

Nov. 6 -- The Guardian, London, on refugees in Zaire

The huge dimensions of the Zairean catastrophe can be gauged by simply considering the latest request from the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees. In one sense it is modest enough: it asks for the minimum that would be required to rescue hundreds of thousands of refugees from a desperate situation. Yet in the light of the current action in the Great Lakes region — and the lack of action in the United Nations or anywhere else — it may also be regarded as asking for the moon.

(With) perhaps half a million refugees in eastern Zaire... this is precisely the kind of issue which the (U.N.) Secretary-General should have defined, at least a week ago, as a 'threat to peace', requiring the council to convene in emergency session until decisions were made. Instead there has been one desultory resolution calling for a cease-fire: the first call for a special sitting was only made yesterday (Monday) by Germany...

Russia needs Yeltsin

Nov. 6 — Die Welt, Berlin, on Russian President Boris Yeltsin's heart surgery

With his surgery, the 65-year-old president showed the entire world and above all his. 148 million countrymen that he wants to return healthy and active to everyday politics. Boris Yeltsin would like to turn around once again the steering wheel of his country that is rapidly sinking deeper into crisis.

Whether he will succeed, even with renewed strength, is doubtful. Even the president will be hardly able to find ways to pump money into nearly empty state coffers and that salaries reach the employed ...

But without Yeltsin, nothing moves, as the last months have shown. And if the firm hand is not used, state money sinks deeper into dark channels.

Chinese trial concerns

Nov. 2 — Mainichi Shimbun, Tokyo, on China's sentence of Wang Dan

With foreign condemnation of the trial very much on their minds, Beijing authorities insist that the proceedings against Wang have been conducted with justice under the law of the country ..

Chinese spokesmen denounce foreign criticism as an intervention in the country's internal affairs, saying that no country tolerates conspiracy against the state. They should be reminded that the international community is concerned about China's idiosyncrasy which finds conspiracy in speech criticizing the authorities.

Western countries and Japan avoid directly etary unit that will reduce the preduce and linking their overall ties with Beijing to human rights issues in China, because of the country's strategic importance in international affairs. But if a complacent Beijing continues oppression of dissidents, its relations with its major counterparts are bound to be limited. Beijing should un that its repressive practices, far from the international norm, are adto the theory of `Chinese threat.'

Voting rights

Dear Editor,

On Tuesday, election day, I was looking forward to voting and taking advantage of that privilege that is unique to democracy. However, when I went to the polls in my district the electoral judge informed me that I was not registered and therefore could not vote. The funny thing is, I thought I had registered through the Republican club on campus.

In mid September, I was greeted in front of the library by a very cheerful member of the Republican club and she asked me if I had registered to vote. I told her I had not and she proceeded to give me what I thought was the proper form. I filled out the form and asked her if that was all I had to do. She said 'yes' and with that I assumed that unless I heard back from anyone, I was all set to vote on Tuesday, November 5. Yesterday I found that my trust was misplaced. The electoral judge also informed that several other BYU students were unable to vote for the same reason.

I consider myself flag-waving, freedom-loving, true-blue citizen of the United States. I am very aware of the fact that many people in this world do not have the freedom to elect public officials. On Tuesday, I learned from personal experience (along with several other students apparently) what it is like to be turned away from the polls. I request that the BYU Republican club apologize, explain publicly what happened, and make the necessary corrections so that such mistakes can be avoided in the future.

Dear Editor,

This letter is a little past due but it's still very appropriate. On October fourth, being the cougar football fan that I am, I went into the bookstore to get some royal blue before I hopped in the car and took off to Logan. I had tickets to the BYU/USU football game and I didn't want to be sporting just any old blue as I cheered for the Cougs in Romney Stadium. Much to my dismay, as I lumbered into the sports department, all I saw was a sea of navy!

As I wandered around, I thought to myself, "Why would a guy want to buy a navy blue shirt when his school colors are royal blue and white? What's more, why would I want to buy a navy blue shirt when by doing so I might be confused with a fan of the very team I was going to cheer against?" I searched around and found some royal blue sweaters on the discount rack, some royal blue hats tucked back into one corner of the room, and a few royal blue shirts in toddlers sizes. Finally, I asked for some assistance and was fortunate enough to get a shirt that someone had just returned. I didn't know it could have originally come from the bookstore but I also didn't care at the time. I snatched it up and was on my way. Nevertheless, I reflected back on my nearly catastrophic experience all the way to the game. After much discussion with friends and family, I was convinced I should voice my

I hope the school has decided not to return to calling navy blue and white its colors. I have emotional ties to our royal blue heritage! What if, for example, the University of Utah went to maroon rather than red? How could a guy foster the same rivalrous animosity towards a dull red that he has for the brilliant, pompous red that Utah wears now? In the same fashion, how can a guy be "all that" while wearing navy? Everyone wears navy. Royal blue, on the other hand, is not so common. It stands out amidst a sea of the more popular navy. I'd even go so far as to say it's a bit flashy. We just can't change the school colors! Doing so would be like kicking me in the teeth and abandoning me for dead! Likewise, having more navy than royal blue in the bookstore is a similar shot to the face. It's like lowering your standards or betraying your country. It's succumbing to the economic and fashion pressures of our day!

Some will say that I'm carrying this a little too far. However, when as a little tike, a guy builds his cougar spirit on the royal blue that Steve Young, Leon White, and Glen Kozlowski all wore, it's a sensitive issue. I have to be adamant about this or my whole world could be thrown into a tumultuous mess! I hope I can see more royal blue in the bookstore and around campus in the coming months. If so, I'm sure I would see more royal blue in the stadium as well.

Kimball Art Center celebrates 20 years

By LANE ANDERSON Universe Staff Writer

Park City's Kimball Art Center has come a long way, baby. Twenty years ago it was converted from a garage into a gallery; today it is visited by a quarter million people each year.

The Kimball Art Center is celebrating its 20th anniversary with an exhibit by acclaimed watercolor artist

Since his exhibition in the humble beginnings of the Kimball Art Genter, Betts and his watercolors have won numerous awards.

Noal Betts, Nov. 1-24.

In 1975 Bill Kimball was in Park City for the first time as part of the Board of Trustees to a company that had just purchased the Park City Ski Resort. On a tourist's tour of the Old Town, he eyed a derelict old building and quipped, "You know, we ought to buy this old wreck and turn in into an Aspen-type gallery."

By dinner time Bill's idea had expanded into a full scale, non-profit art center, complete with a school, a performing arts program and gift

By the next year the soggy walls of a flooded garage were converted with the help of several carpenters, painters, and Kimball's own family who helped hang blinds and wash windows.

Even a crowd of people on the street were inspired to help hang a stained glass panel. When ski season opened the next year, Kimball's idea was realized when the Kimball Arts Center andounced its grand opening, and Park City found a cultural home.

The inaugural exhibition in that fall of 1976 featured the art of Noal Betts. Betts was born, raised and educated primarily in Utah, and his art was first recognized in Utah.

Since his exhibition in the humble beginnings of the Kimball Art Center, Betts and his watercolors have won numerous awards. Also his needlepoint tapestry designs were featured WATERCOLOR EXHIBIT: For their anniversary exhibit, the Kimball Art Center hosts the work of water-color artist Noal Betts, who was the first artist exhibited at their grand opening 20 years ago. paintings entitled "Great Cities of the World," received critical acclaim as it traveled the country before the artist's death in 1994.

It is only fitting that the Kimball Art Center once again host Noal Betts for their anniversary.

"The show is representative of his life", said Gary Sanders, director of the Kimball Art Center. The exhibit is entitled "A Retrospective," and shows on public television. His series of the many faces of Noal Betts, with everything from wildlife watercolor to textured tapestries.

Betts earned a reputation for his portrayal of wildlife and was commissioned by the federal government to do a portrait of the pandas, presented to the U.S. by the people's Republic of China. Critical comments noted his "avoidance of cliche and lack of cloying cuteness. This deftness for representing nature can be appreciated in this exhibit in in the country. the wildlife works, and especially the landscapes such as the work entitled "Park City," which is simplistic and employs subtle use of color. At one time Betts was employed by a cruise line, according to Sanders. Because of this he was one of the few artists who was able to support himself by his artwork only.

"He had all those people captive on the boat," joked Sanders. "They saw his work on their menus, their cabin walls, he couldn't help but sell it."

This also gave Betts' work international flavor in the form of "Acapulco Memories," inspired by sunny Mexico; "Piccadilly Circus," a take on the color and dirtiness of London; and "Kowloon Junks," a scene of oriental ships described as "dragon wings" by one delighted patron.

Betts also ventured into the less taken path of tapestry as a contemporary art form. "Caballeros" gives an interesting parallel to the use of composition and color found in Betts' nature watercolors. Knot-headed boys and fuzzy red birds seem to show this medium.

BYU swimming, diving hosts UNLV, California

By ERIKA WILDE Universe Sports Writer

BYU men's and women's swimming and diving teams welcome to the waters UNLV's co-ed teams and California's women Friday night at 5 p.m. in the RB Swimming Pool.

The competition against California should make this meet a tough early season test for the women's team, BYU women's coach Stan Crump said. The BYU women's swim team beat out solid rivals Utah last week to grab a season-opening win.

"We just want to keep getting better," Crump said. "There will definitely be stiffer competition this week. We know that Cal is good and UNLV has posted some good times this year."

The BYU men were edged out by the more experienced Utes last week and will compete against another experienced team Friday. Coming off conquerors in last year's BYU vs. UNLV dual meet, the Cougars are a bit wary of Friday's rematch. The Cougars lost most of last year's team to graduation while the Rebels return with their scoring power intact.

"UNLV has a tough team," men's coach Tim Powers said. "We'll be the clear underdog, but they're coming to our pool and the guys are training real hard, so we could inflict some damage.' Cougars to watch for at Friday's match include sophomore Sarah McKeever, a triple winner in last week's meet (400-medley relay, 200 IM and 200 fly); senior Cherrill Haws, winner of the 500 and 1000-meter freestyle races; junior Nicole Collard, who won both sprint freestyles; senior Nathan Cook, a double winner on the one and three-meter diving boards; and sophomore Alex Denke, winner of the 500 free and the 400-

Next up for the women's team is the Arizona State Invitational on Nov. 22-23. The men won't compete again until they join the women at the Speedo Cup in Long Beach, Calif., on Dec. 5-7.

Republicans optimistic about working with Clinton

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Savoring their renewed majority, Republican congressional leaders spoke optimistically Wednesday of cooperation with President Clinton on their agenda of tax cuts and smaller government. "We don't have to live in a world of confrontation," said Speaker Newt Gingrich.

At the same time, Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott promised a probe into the allegations of Democratic campaign financial misdeeds that Bob Dole raised in his losing bid for the White House. "We have a responsibility in a variety of ways to take a look at ... what appears to be wrongdoing,"

Clinton, too, sounded hopeful that he and the GOP Congress could work together. Referring to recent legislation that raised the minimum wage, expanded access to health care and reformed welfare, he said, "If we can somehow re-create for the next four years the spirit that prevailed in the last six weeks of the Congress, we can do great things."

Republicans are expected to take a few weeks to sort out their plans for the Congress that convenes in January, but some elements were clear even before the final votes were counted in Tuesday's undecided congressional races.

In an interview, Gingrich renewed his promise to have a constitutional amendment on term limits as the first substantive issue on the House floor

Lott, at a news conference, suggested a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution might be voted on early, as well. That passed the House in 1995 but failed by a single vote in the Senate, with Clinton lobbying lawmakers to oppose it. "It looks like we might have the votes to pass it" when the newly elected senators are sworn in, Lott said, although he also predicted that some former Democratic supporters would be under pressure to switch their votes.

Gingrich said he had spoken by telephone with Clinton during the day and the GOP leaders "want to sit down with him" next week before they begin mapping their agenda.

NASA's Galileo of Jupiter moon

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The first closeup views of Jupiter's frozen moon Callisto, pockmarked by untold millennia of meteoric assaults, will help determine how it could be so different from its lunar siblings.

Callisto, among four Jupiter moons Italian astronomer Galileo Galilei discovered in 1610, is the oldest, outermost and least geologically active. It is also believed to be one of the most heavily cratered objects in the solar

So far, NASA's Galileo spacecraft has shown that Io has active, sulfurspewing volcanoes, Europa may have a deep, frozen ocean and Ganymede has icy quakes.

Galileo recently came within 686 miles of Callisto's surface, taking measurements that should help determine its composition and history.

"Everything is going very smoothly," said project manager Bill O'Neil, of NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena.

But scientists will have to wait until late next week, when they begin playing back Galileo's tape-recorded data of the encounter, to get a look at what the spacecraft found. With a diameter of 2,986 miles, Callisto is nearly as big as planetsized Ganymede, the largest moon in the solar system. It also is believed to have a rocky core and a deep, icy crust like Ganymede. Galileo looked closely at two ancient basins, named Asgard and

Valhalla, that were formed when meteors slammed into Callisto. "We want to try to understand how the surface has changed since the time of those impacts, what kinds of geologic forces caused those changes to happen," said Ken Klaasen, a member of the Galileo imaging science team. Galileo began an orbital tour of Jupiter and its major moons last December.

TROPICAL HEALER: Morinda Citrifolia, also known as noni, is a small green fruit found all over the Pacific Islands. Islanders have used the fruit juice for years to help cleanse the body from harmful bacteria and, more recently, to help relieve stress.

Juice processed in Lindon can help the body heal itself

By MELINDA BEAL Universe Staff Writer

The healing abilities of the juice of the noni fruit, once only available to those living in tropical regions, is now being processed for sale by the Morinda company in Lindon.

"The juice doesn't cure things, but it enhances the body's ability to cure itself," said Juanita Benioni, a Polynesian native.

Morinda Citrifolia, also known as noni, is a small green fruit found all over the Pacific Islands. Polynesian natives have been using the juice of the fruit for years to cure everything from skin abrasions to diabetes. It was considered by island healers to be a strong blood purifier that could help the body cleanse itself from harmful

But the healing abilities were not known in the United States until Ralph Heinick conducted studies on

According to Heinick's studies, the noni fruit is abundant with the alkaloid xeronine. The body produces xeronine in order to activate enzymes so that it can function properly, and the alkaloid is influential in energizing the body. The compounds in the noni fruit work at a cellular level, causing cell regeneration and increas- reliever.

According to Heinick, by increasing the amount of xeronine in our bodies, we will be more able to fight off diseases such as high blood pressure, cancer and arthritis.

As the body ages, the ability to produce xeronine decreases, and, therefore, our susceptibility to illness increases. The juice of the noni fruit is able to counteract this natural depletion, according to Heinick.

The Morinda company located in Lindon is one of the only companies to sell noni, said Patoa Benioni, a native of Cook Islands and promoter of noni juice. The juice is harvested in the tropics and then brought to the U.S. in steel barrels where it is processed for sale.

The juice of the noni fruit is used only when it is fully ripe. The fruit has a terrible smell, and it is difficult for most people to swallow, but the Morinda company has combined the fruit with other juices to make it easier to drink

"The noni tree, to me, is a miracle tree," said Patoa.

The islanders have a use for every part of the tree, Patoa said. As a child, Patoa said he used it to heal cuts that he got while fishing. Juanita, his wife, who used the juice as a child when she was sick, now uses it as a stress

After Tuesday's loss to Republican Chris Cannon, Rep. Bill Orton, D-Utah, still affirms that he is baffled by Garfield County's rejection of an offer of $100,000 from the Department of the Interior that would help initiate a public planning process for residents of the county.

Orton resents that Garfield County commissioners labeled his efforts to secure federal funding as a political ploy to garner votes just days before

Orton, who opposes the manner in which the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument was created, worked to get funding after President Clinton's Sept. 18 announcement to create the monument, whose 1.7 million acres span lands in Garfield and Kane counties in southern Utah.

In a press release issued this week, Orton called the rejection "truly bizarre" and continued by saying that he secured the funding for the Garfield and Kane counties in response to a direct request made by both counties for assistance.

"The only thing different is that the taxpayers of Garfield County will be $100,000 poorer," Orton said.

Garfield County Commissioner Louise Liston has not been available for comment on the issue for over a Dave Lemmon, Orton's press secretary, said that Liston will not respond to calls from Washington.

"They asked for help and then rejected it," Lemmon said. "We are all baffled, and they still won't talk to

In a press release, Orton said that after the partisanship of the election dies down, Garfield Commissioners will realize that the only people they have hurt are the residents of their county and hopefully, in the future, they will accept funding and choose to participate in the public planning

Yet at Tuesday evening's GOP Victory '96 event, Senator Orrin Hatch who opposes the monument, expressed a different sentiment as he supported the residents and the local government in Garfield county and their rejection of $100,000 in funds.

Hatch also noted that the lawsuit which has been filed by several Utah factions against the federal govern-

Canada's aim to sell reactors upsets coalition

Associated Press

TORONTO - Anti-nuclear groups Wednesday denounced the soon-to-be-finalized sale of two nuclear reactors to China, but the Canadian government, unwilling to lose business in the world's biggest market, said it had no qualms about the $3 billion deal.

Prime Minister Jean Chretien, who has aggressively sought to boost Canadian exports to Asia, is expected to sign a final agreement on the sale during a trade mission to China later this month.

A coalition of groups opposed to the deal released a study Wednesday titled "Exporting Disaster," which calls the sale immoral and economically unsound.

"In order to sell CANDU reactors, Canada looks the other way when it comes to economics, human rights violations and nuclear proliferation," according to the Campaigr for Nuclear Phaseout.

The study shows Canada should follow the example of the United States in barring the export of reactors to China because China has supplied nuclear technology to other nations on the brink of building atomic bombs.

CANDU reactors are manufactured by state-controlled Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., which recently signed a deal with Romania making it the first Western company to supply reactors to a former East Bloc country. The study shows the pursuit of buyers for CANDU reactors has led to the erosion of Canada's human rights poli-"Potential CANDU customers such as China, Indonesia and Turkey are among the worst human rights violators in the world, and Canada should not be selling them nuclear reactors," said Kristen Ostling, of the coalition.
